"This is a crowd at Shibuya crossing, Tokyo, which is the world's busiest pedestrian intersection. This scene is replayed every 90 seconds or so all day long, with hundreds of people scurrying in all directions. High ISO and quick successive shooting made this shot possible."

"When I went to Venice, I wanted to take a photograph that captured a beautiful, romanticised Italy. This is by far my favourite image from my trip and sums up the impression I get when I think of Venice."

Shot details: "Digital Photographer" is a magazine I always follow in Saudi Arabia, and I'm very honoured to have won this title with a photo from an inspirational trip to the Taj Mahal"

"Beautifully lit, balanced composure without losing sense of scale, this image portrays a feeling of calm and isolation."

"A very moody image that captures the atmosphere of this stunning location. For many, India is all about vibrant colours, however in this case the photographer has made an interesting choice of mono, and frankly the better for it. Without the lone person sat dead centre, this would be just another India image – great timing and conception."
